

Importance of Research Skills in the Workplace & Building Your Career

Finding a job has become more complicated, according to many fresh graduates. Alarmingly the unemployment rate in Bangladesh (5.23% according to 2021) is increasing with new graduates every year. However, more vacancies remain vacant in many public and private corporations. One of the biggest problems is the lack of research skills to find the right job.

Research Skills to Find the Right Job

Knowing which sites to explore for jobs is crucial. For example, if you want a job at NGO, then make a whole list of local and international NGOs in Bangladesh and explore each to see the vacancies, requirements, and skills to be employed there. This requires time and research skills to understand how to collect data from the institutes and list the desired ones.

The Reason for not Researching

Often people only go for the jobs that their friends and families do. But it limits them from exploring all sorts of innovative and relative fields out there and they fail to find the right one.

Research Skills within the Workplace

Research skills mean critical thinking skills, a liberal mindset, and the capability to find problems and suitable resolutions. One needs it within the workplace to sustain and thrive better. Because it would help them to successfully collect data for the task and accomplish their roles in the office, it can lead to better increment and even promotion or better job offers.

Building Research Skills

Google, different databases, libraries, social media, the film industry, and practical fields work as sources to collect data for conducting research. Searching through different keywords and browsing the internet is the first step. The necessary data should be collected, listed, and analyzed to get the result. One must read different books, research various issues, and search as much as necessary to get the desired answer.

One must learn research skills to understand their career choices and find the right jobs that might be looking for them. Every corporate has different criteria that benefit other people, and one must do proper research to build their career.
